What I tried is not working, but maybe because I am a beginner: HashMap copies = new HashMap(this.map); A: Your attempt is almost correct. You have to follow the rules of Java to create a deep copy. As per JavaDoc of HashMap It is not generally permissible for a subclass to implement or inherit the hashCode method, because this effectively gives the subclass a method to manipulate the hash code of any object to which it is assigned, allowing for hash table entries to move between buckets, allowing entries to be evicted, and potentially leading to infinite recursion. So You can't use hashCode implementation of HashMap but you can manually implement hashCode method for your object. In any conventional Super Naughty Naughty snoopy doggy bag, the bag is
